MAKING LAWS IN A POST-MODERN WORLD: ARE YOU READY?

How can we prepare for drafting laws in a post-modern world? Information technology is profoundly affecting our world and the way we draft for it. The conference will look at its impact beginning with a keynote address by law and AI scholar Professor Gillian Hadfield. It will continue with sessions on the transformation of law into apps (“law as code”), coping with a global pandemic and drafting to accommodate demands for regulatory flexibility and innovation.

The conference will also look at what is happening in the present with a review of, gender-inclusive drafting, developments in legislative interpretation and drafting regulation-making powers. Workshop sessions will also be offered to deepen participant’s practical perspectives on these topics. Each day will include a question & answer period.

In addition to Professor Hadfield, other notable speakers include The Honourable Thomas Cromwell. This conference is a must for those who want to draft legislation in the post-modern world.
12:00 – 12:15 PM  WELCOME REMARKS AND INTRODUCTION

OPENING REMARKS AND SUMMARY OF PREVIOUS WEEKS

Co-Chairs
- John Mark Keyes, Sessional Professor, Faculty of Law – Common Law Section, University of Ottawa
- Sandra Markman, Legislative Counsel, Department of Justice, Government of Yukon

POST-MODERN REGULATION: KEEPING UP WITH A CHANGING WORLD

Existing regulations are sometimes not well suited to emerging and disruptive technologies. This panel explores how their design can be adapted to rapidly evolving technological contexts. Regulators increasingly seek administrative flexibility in regulations while legislative counsel seek to draft rules that provide guidance to regulatees. The panel will consider these tensions in drafting enabling authorities and regulations, particularly in relation to experimental “regulatory sandboxes.”
